On the 19th of September, at 6 am he was deported back to Serbia from the Slovenian border. He reached the Slovenian border area by train, and the Slovenian police caught him while he was crossing the border by walking. He declared the officers from the Slovenian border police didn't beat him but called some colleagues. He was put in a police van, and brought back to the Croatian side. The Slovenian police « transferred » him to the Croatian one and he got beaten by the Croatian police officers. He was then brought to Zagreb in a van by the Croatian border police. From Zagreb, the police brought him back to the Serbian border: the border police beat him, especially kicking his right leg. This time he didn't take money with him, and he still have his phone.
