ORIGINAL REPORT

He was deported back from the Croatian's capital to Serbia on the 21st of September. The Croatian police caught him in the streets of Zagreb, and the police officers asked for his documents. He answered he didn't have any. At the police station, when he asked asylum to the police he got « no » as an answer, « in Croatia no asylum, go back ». He was beaten twice, the first time at the police station, especially hit in the neck, head and legs. 2 police officers brought him back in a van, where he was alone, to the train station at the border between Serbia and Croatia, and he got beaten a second time.
