The men expressed their intention to seek for asylum, so the police asked for their personal details, way there and destination, and took pictures of them. The police also checked their bodies and belongings and asked for property, and some money and electric devices were confiscated. After that the police and police dogs committed the violence. They got beaten with fists and stick (long thin with armrest), kicked to all body parts, and hit by head of dogs and scrated by them to all body parts.

Then the men were transported with big police van to the Serbian-Hungarian border near Horgos Serbia, where they were the following morning about at 7-8 am. There the police ordered the men to go back to Serbian side. The men ran away and walked back to Subotica Serbia.
