ORIGINAL REPORT

B., a young man from Afghanistan, 19 years old, started his game in Serbia. He entered a truck there, which would take him to Slovenia in two days. But on March 25, 2019, when he arrived in Slovenia, the truck stopped and the driver found him, hiding in the truck. The driver instantly called the police. B. tried to escape, but the driver stopped him while insulting him. The police, wearing the official uniform with the Croatian flag, arrived shortly after at the place where the truck was parked. They beat and kicked him all over his body. Afterwards, he was taken to jail in Croatia in a white van.

"I was in a very small room without water and food for one day."

The police asked him to sign a document, in order to give him food, but he refused to sign.

"First the food, then I will sign".

The police refused his demand and didn't hand him out any food. The document was written in English, a language he doesn't understand well. B. never had the services of a translator. The police took photos of him but not his fingerprints.

Afterwards, he was deported to Serbia in a police car, after five days on "the game".
